ABSTRACT

Sponsored by the Commission on Religion in Appalachia, Inc. (CORA), this 1971 atlas seeks to "facilitate communication and planning among CORA member communions and related agencies" within Appalachia by presenting data on administrative units, members, churches, boards, agencies, and committees of the following: American Baptist Convention, American Lutheran Church, Catholic Church, Christian Church (Disciples), Church of God, Church of the Brethren, Episcopal Church, Friends United Meeting, Lutheran Church in America, Lutheran Church (Missouri Synod), Mennonite Church, Presbyterian Church (U.S.), Reformed Church in America, Southern Baptist Convention Home Mission Board, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church, and United Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Section A of the atlas contains a county-outline map for each communion, showing judicatory boundaries (at 2 levels where appropriate); a data sheet gives names of individual units corresponding to boundaries and addresses of administrative offices that handle day-to-day business. Distributions of denominational membership and local congregations are also provided on spot maps. Section B shows selected church boards, agencies, committees, and projects operative at the regional or judicatory level. Section C contains non-church data relevant to regional church planning; these data are based on 1970 census information. (MJB)

ATLAS OF THE CHURCH IN APPALACHIA was produced for the Research Task Force of the Commission on Religion in Appalachia (CORA), by the Town & Country Department of the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA), Washington, D. C., and the Office of Planning and Research of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., New York. The editors are Bernard Quinn, Research Coordinator of CARA's Town & Country Department, and Douglas Johnson, Program Director for Research and Information, NCC.

CORRECTIONS AND SUGGESTIONS for future editions should be sent to: Rev. Bernard Quinn, Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate, 1717 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D. C. 20036.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS. The editors wish to express appreciation to James Romer, of CARA's Town & Country Department, who served as general editorial assistant; to Eli P. March, of the Appalachian Regional Commission, who provided suggestions and materials; and to those persons in denominational offices who furnished the church data.

Samuel Surovell, of Federal Graphics, furnished the Appalachian base map. The American Automobile Association granted permission to use copyrighted maps in the cover design.

Published July 1, 1971 by the Commission on Religion in Appalachia, Inc. (CORA), 864 Weisgarber Rd., NW, Knoxville, Tenn. 37919. Distributed at cost price of $2. 50.

FOREWORD

Most institutions and agencies in contemporary society are searching for new approaches and structures to accomplish their objectives more effectively. One approach finding increasing favor in many circles - private, governmental and church - is a regional approach to planning, programming and delivery of services. National attention has been given to the mountainous section of the United States stretching across thirteen states from lower New York to northern Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi, called "Appalachia," as a regional model for planning and development. In 1965, seventeen different church bodies established The Commission on Religion in Appalachia, Inc. (CORA) to develop a united approach to the church's mission in Appalachia.

The ATLAS OF THE CHURCH IN APPALACHIA is designed to facilitate communication and planning among CORA member communions and related agencies within the Appalachian region. This 1971 edition has been expanded and revised.

Section A of the ATLAS contains a county-outline map for each communion, showing judicatory boundaries (at two levels where appropriate). Opposite each map is a "data sheet" giving names of individual units corresponding to the boundaries, with addresses of administrative offices that handle day-to-day business. Spot maps showing distribution of denominational membership and local congregations are also included.

Section B lists selected church boards, agencies, committees and projects, operative at the regional or judicatory level.

Section C contains non-church data relevant to regional church planning, updated according to the latest available 1970 census information.

It is our hope that the ATLAS will become an indispensable tool for cooperative planning within church circles; and that it will enable more effective cooperation with community agencies with which the church works.

WHAT IS THE COMMISSION ON RELIGION IN APPALACHIA?

The Commission on Religion in Appalachia, Inc. (CORA) was born in 1965 as a cooperative effort in the church's continuing response to Appalachian needs. Seventeen religious communions, eleven state councils of churches, the Council of the Southern Mountains and related church agencies created the Commission.

CORA is a cooperative effort to develop joint-action-in-mission that is relevant to the region's needs because it is indigenous, innovative and ecumenical. The BASIC PURPOSE is to engage the resources of the Church and other agencies in activities designed to meet the pressing human needs of the people of Appalachia. The goals are to build community and to combat poverty in Appalachia -- and through joint action in this twin mission, to help renew the church.

CORA's origins date back to a consultation in June, 1956 in Berea, Kentucky when fifteen denominations met to discuss cooperative church programs. The need for more comprehensive information as a basis for planning led to establishment of the Southern Appalachian Studies Group, which in 1962 produced the classic document, The Southern Appalachian Region: A Survey, edited by Thomas R. Ford.

CORA was organized...

...to deal with the religious, moral and spiritual implications inherent in the economic, social and cultural conditions in the Appalachian region of the United States;

...to develop a united approach to the church's mission in Appalachia by:

consultation - providing a consultative body for the sharing of information and concern primarily among the religious but also in the social, economic, educational and governmental agencies serving the Appalachian region;

research, study, education - expanding understanding of the conditions of the Appalachian region and giving guidance to appropriate programs of the churches and church bodies;

coordination - providing a means of discovering suitable areas of staff and program coordination, recognizing that there is a place for both denominational as well as interdenominational programs in Appalachia;

projects - engaging in projects that are helpful in fulfilling the church's mission;

...to assist its members with new programs and redefinition of goals to meet changing human needs;

...to provide a vehicle for the communions and related agencies to plan together and to develop joint-action-in-mission on a regional basis; and

...to implement the church's concern as follow-up of the Southern Appalachian Studies.

Religious communions hold membership in CORA in a manner most consistent with their own structures. Several relate through judicatories located in Appalachia; and several through boards of missions. Each member-group sends three delegates and three alternates to the semi-annual Commission meetings. These delegates, and especially the "chairman of the delegation," have responsibility for maintaining lines of communication between CORA and its constituent communions and agencies. Perhaps CORA's most important contribution has been to bring churchmen together for dialogue and action on Appalachian needs.

CORA embodies a new style of the church in mission in its approach. It builds regional programs out of learnings in local pilot projects. In programming, it works through informal coalitions and task forces in a flexible fashion around issues, rather than through pre-structured programs. As an ecumenical organization, CORA represents a unified effort in mission by a widely diverse group of religious bodies.

Key elements of the CORA model are its collegiate staff and its task forces. The collegiate staff includes both full-time and part-time persons assigned by member denominations or cooperating agencies to work on CORA projects. Coordination is provided by CORA's Executive Director, and financial support is furnished by the denominations and agencies.

Task forces are currently working on self-help approaches to poverty; social, economic and political issues; research; youth leadership; and volunteer services. Training and communication task forces are now being organized. The task forces include persons with expertise, who are church leaders and/or representatives of non-church agencies.

The MAJOR PROGRAM THRUSTS are designed: (1) to provide a vehicle for the communions' reassessment of existing mission activities in light of the requirements of the people of the region and the potentials for joint-action-in-mission; and (2) to initiate projects aimed directly at the region's pressing human needs whenever those needs cannot realistically be met solely through a reallocation of the existing mission resources of the member communions.

The Appalachian Mission Renewal Project established in the spring of 1971 was sparked by a request from the United Methodist Board of Missions and the United Methodist Appalachian Development Committee for assistance in an ecumenical study and review of that denomination's mission projects in Appalachia, looking toward joint strategic planning for more effective ministry to human needs. AMRP will include a comprehensive inventory of church resources in Appalachia, and a pilot project in four selected multi-county areas (Local Development Districts). The pilot project is designed to develop a profile of each area, documenting pressing human needs, and establish a review-planning process.

Growing in importance are the experimental projects which CORA undertakes in order to build models from which the church may learn for future action.

The Upper Hiwassee Project in North Carolina-Georgia is exploring patterns of multi-county cooperation through research and training.

The region-wide Human/Economic Appalachian Development Project (HEAD) has a pilot-demonstration operation in the Kentucky River Area of Eastern Kentucky. HEAD is a unique blend of human and economic development. It is also a creative partnership combining local people and church, government and volunteer agencies.

The Model Valley project encompassing Bell-Whitley Counties, Kentucky and Claiborne-Campbell Counties, Tennessee is an experiment in total community development.

Increased relevance and service to local churches and to judicatories and agencies at all levels is a major goal of CORA. A major thrust in this direction has been to assist denominations to coordinate their own structures, programs, and agencies as these relate to Appalachia. Work with Appalachian development committees created by many denominations provides a channel through which CORA fulfills this function.

CORA has also established a creative approach to the media. A directory of more than 150 judicatory publications and appropriate national publications has been compiled by CORA's Appalachian Religious Communication Project. APRECOM provides a monthly news service to each of these publications and other communications media on Appalachian issues and needs. APRECOM also provides consultative services to local community groups in developing communication approaches.

Through the encouragement of dialogue and cooperative action among denominations, CORA is helping to forge new patterns of ministry and new styles of ecumenical action.

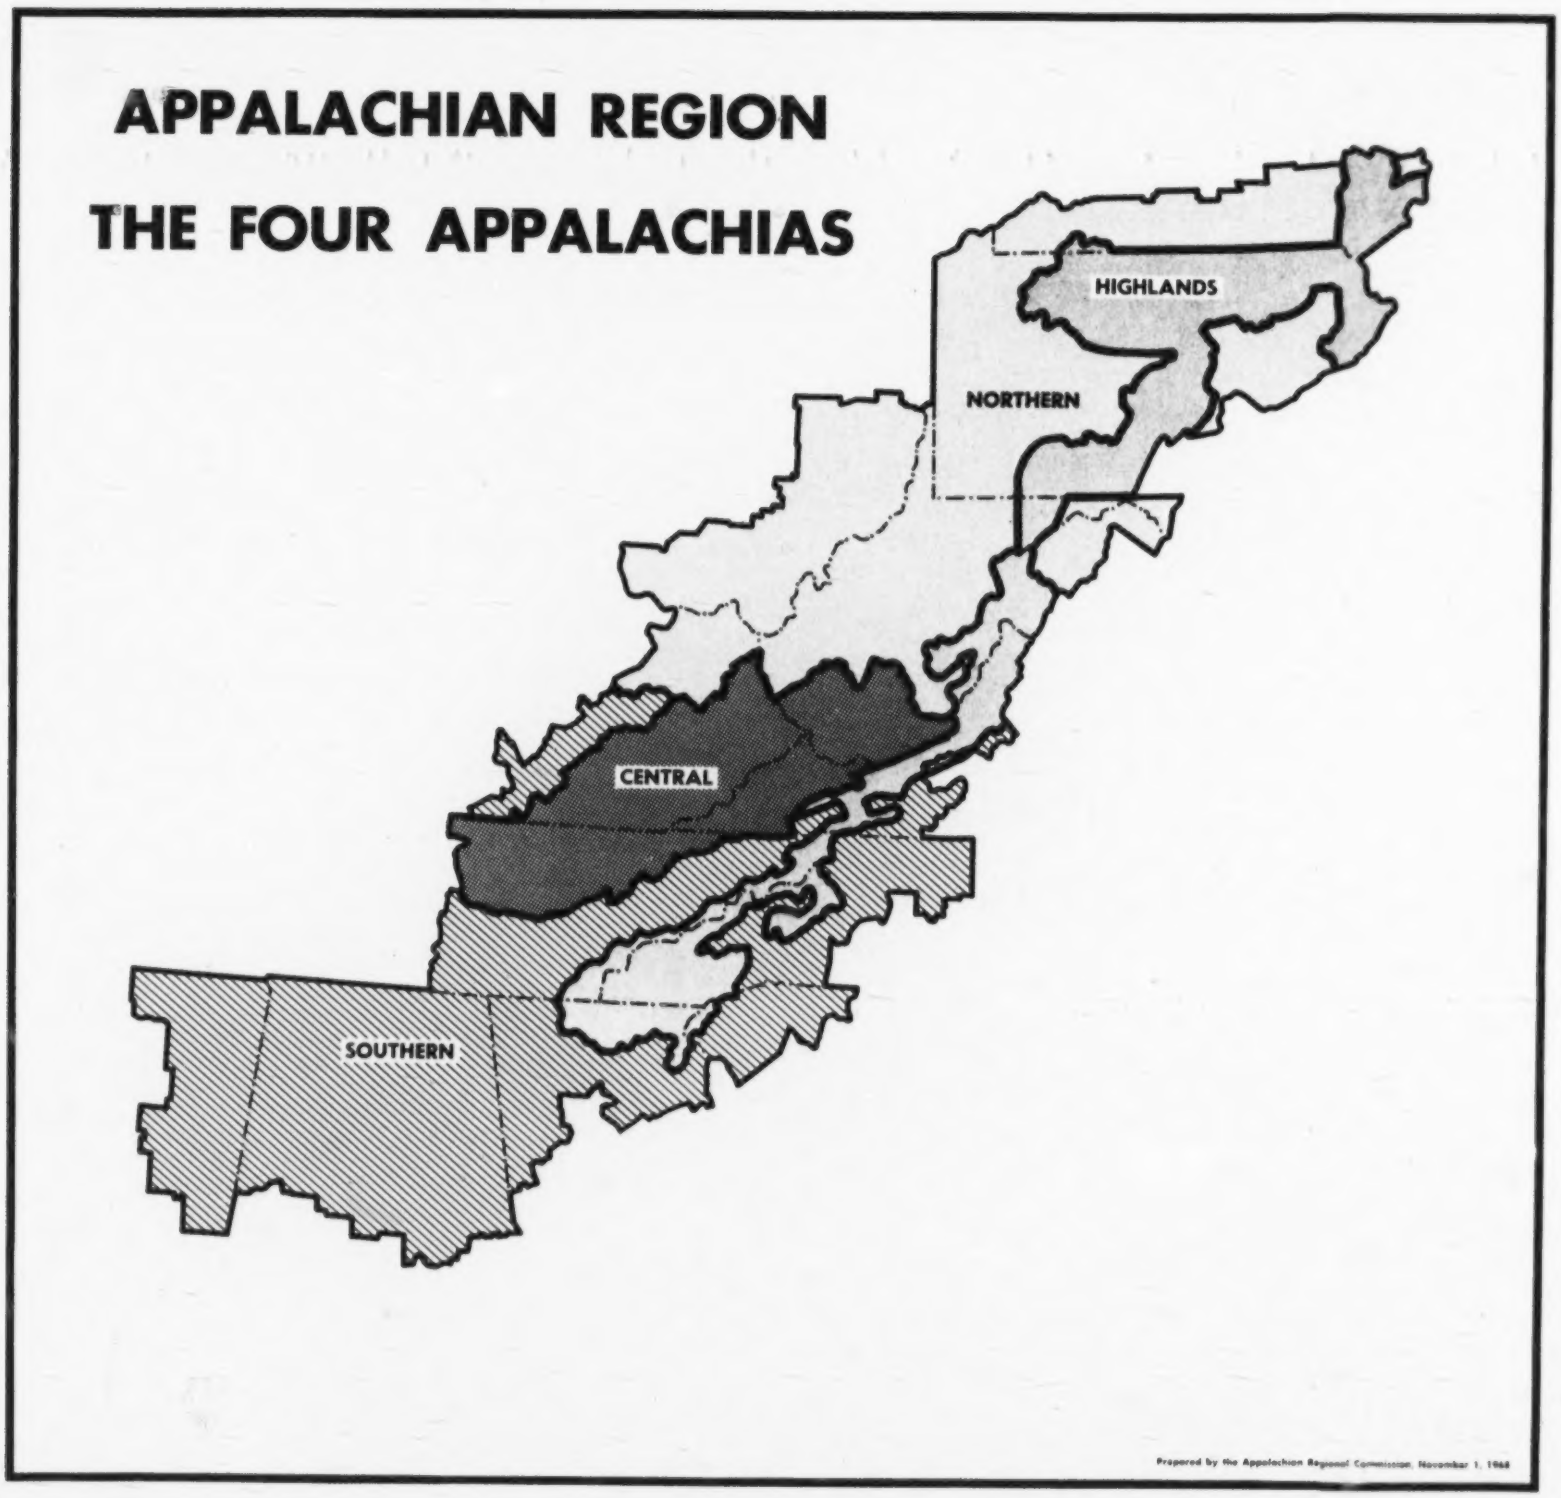
NON-CHURCH DATA



SOUTHERN APPALACHIA : Industrialization and urbanization occurring rapidly, converting the old agricultural economy into a new industrial one.

CENTRAL APPALACHIA : Urbanization to be accelerated if adequate services and employment opportunities are to be developed for the million and a half people living in this area.

APPALACHIAN HIGHLANDS : Has its greatest potential as a recreation, tourism and resource area for the rest of Appalachia as well as the remainder of the Eastern United States.

NORTHERN APPALACHIA : Has problems related to the transition from dependence on a coal-steel-railroad economy to new types of manufacturing and employment.

COUNCIL OF THE SOUTHERN MOUNTAINS, INC.
College Box 2307
Berea, Kentucky 40403

PURPOSE:

The Council is a voluntary association of persons and organizations with an interest in the people of the Appalachian Region, with special concern for those in deprived areas.

Believing the region's human and natural resources to be critical factors in the total life of the nation, the Council proposes to promote the best social, economic, cultural and spiritual interests of the Appalachian Region.

NOTE: Per capita income is computed by dividing total personal income (unadjusted for residence) by population estimates for each given year. These population estimates were obtained by an interpolation based on the 1960 and 1970 census of population. Total personal income estimates were provided by the Office of Business Economics, U.S. Department of Commerce. The per capita income shown is subject to change based on official census population estimates for intercensal years and to adjustments for residence.
